The federal government is stepping back its role in reducing harmful carbon emissions. In the City of Chicago, residents are looking to step up by enacting good energy policy and taking actions in buildings where they live, work, and play. This workshop will present information on energy efficiency and renewable energy policy and will also give tips for Chicago residents and businesses to reduce energy and incorporate renewables, saving money and reducing air pollution. Tips and information will be most relevant to condo and apartment owners, but all are welcome to attend!
